ABSTRACT

A method and system are disclosed for monitoring the performance of web-based services. The method comprises receiving a transaction from a client and routing the transaction to an appropriate web service for execution of the transaction. During execution of the transaction, performance data relating to the execution of the transaction is monitored and logged. The collected performance data is then queried based on pre-defined performance metrics and web service performance reports are generated. A system for the foregoing method is also disclosed.